To the lovers of strange goods the bazaars of Damascus are far more alluring than those of Cairo or of Constantinople. The capacious chests of the merchants contain much that we would buy were our purses longer. Old embroideries of wonderful colors, delicate china, silks of many hues, swords of cunning workmanship, all these lie piled beside us on the floor. It is but seldom that a really good specimen of the Damascus sword can be obtained, for the art of working and engraving steel is dead.

These swords were made of alternate layers of fron and steel, so finely tempered that the blade would bend to the hilt without breaking, with an edge so keen that no coat of mail could resist it, and a surface so highly polished that when a Moslem wished to rearrange his turban he used his sword for a looking glass.

Transcontinental trains used to stop in the Smoky Hill valley of Kansas to allow passengers a view of such a wonder. It realized all the travelers' dreams of agricultural splendor. Hundreds such visions now mark the great grain area of the plains, but their beauty is none the less. Six hundred and forty acres of wealth! It shimmered beneath the perfect opalescent blue of the sky, the tall straws bending with their weight of grain. Standing on the sent of the reaper one might see in the distance a glimmer of green pastures and catch glimpses of rustling fields of corn, but here was the heart of summer.—C. M. Harger in Scrib-

Justifying His Lecture.

A lecturer who had a very fine lecure on "The Decadence of Pure English" gave his address before a wo-man's club. At the close of the talk a very much overdressed woman of the "fuss and feathers" type came up to him and said: "I did enjoy your talk ever and ever so much, and I agree with you that the English language is decading awfully. Hardly no one talks proper nowadays, and the land only ws what the next generation will talk like if nothing sin't done about it."

The Boston Maid and the Author. Garnish-I see you have my novel. I'll bet you had to look at the last page to see how it came out. Miss Quizzer-No, I looked at the name of the publishers on the title page to see how it came out, and even now I can't understand how it was.-Boston Transcript.

The old adage that "lightning never strikes twice in the same place" has often been disproved. Here is an instance in point: In the summer of 1884 the farmhouse of Henry Axtell, in Chemung county, N. Y., was struck by lightning three times in one day. First it split the chimney from top to bottom, ruined stove and pipe and bored several large holes in the floor. An hour later a "holt" struck the same house and tore a milk bench, upon which several cans of milk were setting, all to pieces. The same evening a third flash entered the roof and tore the legs from n bedstead.

"How far do you travel in crossing the ocean from Liverpool to New York?" asked the instructor at the night school.

"Four thousand miles."

"Oh, oo. Think again." "That's right," persisted the shaggy haired pupil. "I know the book says 3,000 miles, an' that's what it is in a straight line, but I'm countin' in the ups an' downs. I've been acrost."-Chicago Tribune.
